

SUNDAY READING.

Peace hath her victories no less renowned than war, says John Milton; and these words of his, albeit they are not bound within the lids of the sacred Book, are quite as well worthy of quotation, comment and application as many lines which might be selected from the Jewish writers of sacred history. It is a victory of peace that inventions have been made which bring the works and stratagems of war within the acknowledged limits of science; for when war was subject to the prowess and strength of personal force and individual courage; when men wore mail and smote with falchions and reduced cities with catapults, mild eyed Peace had not yet opened a path for her wisest sister, Science, and giant strength and physical courage ruled the ranks and dictated the terms of combat and conclusion. To-day the pen is mightier than the sword; to-day the busy needle of the sewing machine, potent, almost, as one of the silent forces of nature, puts to shame the wrath of armies, and sends the sword to the swarthy hands of the iron-founder. To-day the bowed and study-worn inventor, and not Richard of the lion heart, tells the issue of sieges and rules the fierce conflict of the sea and harbor with bolts and shields of iron. Peace grows up from the silent but potent depths of Science, and in the realm of Reason grow the grafted fruits which have come to supersede the seedlings of a less cultured eye. War stands abashed and confounded in the presence of a peace which rests upon the intelligent courage of reason. And as schools grow and the press becomes purer; as the better parts of men's minds dominate the inner passions of men's nature; as man's humanity to man finds a wider exemplification and a stronger recognition, the victories of Peace will not only be recognized as better worthy of renown than the achievements of war, but they will wrest the plain and grove and mountain side, the beach, the headland and the sea from squadron, battery and line-of-battle ship, and hang the olive wreath on high, above pasture, farm and bay. And this shall be the millennium; this shall be the perfection of the day when there shall be no more war, and when the gentle eyes of peace shall cease to be made to weep in the presence of the angry crest of war.

SOME WORDS FOR AND OF JUDAISM.

On Saturday, February 20, at the Temple Emanuel, New York, Doctor Gotthel delivered a discourse upon certain contrasts and comparisons of Judaism and Christianity. In the course of his very excellent sermon he said:

The Jews are to-day scattered over the world because of their love for liberty and of truth, and thousands have given up their lives rather than deny their faith. And to-day no Israelite can be faithful and true to liberty who is not also true to God. Of all the sad experiences of Israel this is the saddest, that their love for the Lord and His law should be turned against them, and a thousand pulpits in Christian lands declare that the poor Jew is to be pitied and prayed for, because he walks in the bondage of the Lord, and it is the duty of every one to cover his from his eyes. This has become stereotyped, so that every little child who has learned his catechism knows it by heart. The Doctor spoke of the intellectual liberty enjoyed by Israelites here, and remarked that it is their duty to return good for evil, but, nevertheless, to speak their minds freely and with frankness, with charity to all men and with malice to none. The Doctor defined what bondage is—restraining a man from the exercise of his natural faculties and powers and rights—and showed that Israelites are not in bondage in this sense. If we are to have peace of any kind he said the law must be observed, but when the law or social customs seek to degrade the people they cry out for freedom or for death. The best part of a man's nature may be kept oppressed and he be held as a soulless tool. But the bondman can never do that which he desires. He is not free to act. But can any such principles be applied to the Jew?

Replying to some recent proceedings in a Baptist Conference and the question there propounded of "How shall we reach the Jews?" he said:

Now they need not go to the dram shops to find us; they need not look for us in prison cells. We can and do read, and though we may not be able to pronounce the English well, said the Doctor, they need experience no difficulty in reaching us. We are at our homes, and if any one calls we shall receive him courteously. But is not this a gross wrong to us? I believe the Jewish heart is difficult to reach, and when the Jewish minister opens the Bible you may not be able to follow him, but in what sense are we any more sinners? asked Dr. Gotthel with energy and spirit—in what sense are we any more sinners than all others? Are all the members of Christian churches saints? But if it be a question merely of changing our faith we shall simply say to those gentlemen, No! As long as it is a question whether we shall throw stones at the graves of our martyred forefathers and declare that they were wrong, and that they groped in the darkness, we have but one answer to give, and that will be given with emphasis.

THE POPES.

We have the authority of the Guardian Angel for the following interesting facts in connection with the Supreme Pontiffs of Rome:—The whole number of Popes from St. Peter to Pius IX. is 257. Of these 82 are mentioned as saints, not only because of their holy lives, but on account of certain miracles which they have been able to perform; 33 have suffered martyrdom; 104 have been Romans, and 103 natives of other parts of Italy; 15 have been Frenchmen; 49 Greeks; 7 Germans; 5 Asiatics; 3 Africans; 1 was a Hebrew; 1 an Englishman. Only one, Pius IX., has occupied the Pontifical chair more than twenty-five years—the length of St. Peter's administration.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Somebody said very quaintly the other day that if a man wants a suit to last three months he goes to some fashionable clothier on Broadway; if he wants a suit that will last a life-time he goes to a court of chancery or becomes a prominent pastor in Brooklyn; but if he wants a suit for eternity he puts on "the robe of righteousness."

Some people's religious consciousness takes queer freaks. Fontenelle liked his asparagus with oil; his friend, Cardinal Dubois, liked it with sauce. They dined together once a week, and half the asparagus was dressed one way and half the other. One day Fontenelle heard of the sudden death of his friend, and, forgetting the sadness of the calamity, he opened the kitchen door and cried out, "Cook, all the asparagus in oil to-day!" This instance of irreverence is surpassed, however, by the woman who, when informed that her husband had hung himself, thought a moment, and then exclaimed, "Well, that accounts for the loss of my clothes line." Deep grief does not affect all persons in the same way.

It is a noteworthy fact that the nervous system is seriously exhausted by a religious service which extends beyond nine o'clock, but rather stimulated and refreshed by a German which lasts till nearly daylight. Sermon vs. German are very well as rhymes, but in other respects they seem to differ.

Dr. Cumming has been at his calculations once more. This time he has made no mistakes in adding up the symbolical columns which he finds in visions. The world is to be burned up somewhere near the 1st of next September. Ministers will take their last vacation in July and August, and it is to be hoped that all arrears will be paid up in full, that they may have as good a time as possible. By the next frost there will have been the biggest conflagration ever known, and the whole planet will be, in insurance phrase, "a total loss." We ought, as Americans, to feel complimented that this important event is put down for the centennial year.

A man in the Inquiry Room said the other day that he couldn't join the Church because there were so many bad men in it. Well, there is logic, and then, again, there is common sense. If it is true that very many who profess religion do so falsely, then it is clearly time that some earnest folks go into the Church who will live up to their belief. Religion is all right, whether its professors are or not. A bad man who is in has no right to keep a good man out. An appeal is made to our sense of honor, and we should feel more than ever like joining the Church and putting things straight.

Rev. M. D. Conway, who seems to possess one of those rare and gifted intellects, which do not stand in need of a revelation, has recently been "called" to fill the place of Theodore Parker in the New England consciousness. To fill it? One winter night Dr. Holmes said to a large and expectant Lyceum audience which had gathered to hear Rufus Choate, "Ladies and gentlemen, I am here, not to fill Mr. Choate's place, but to rattle round it!"

Rev. E. D. Winslow, late of Rotterdam, has concluded to take up his permanent residence at or near Boston, Mass. Friends who mourned his sudden departure will gladly pay his passage home. It is believed that the very best of care will be taken of him for some years to come, and there is a rumor that he will be offered a position, without salary, in the Penitentiary. There is also a report that certain bank officers go daily to the end of Long Wharf, and sing in lugubrious chorus, Mr. Sankey's hymn, "Will You Come? Will You Come?" Winslow has heard the piteous tones of the quartet and is on his way.

It is said that the father and sister of the murdered Sara Alexander have expressed a desire to be present at the execution of Rubenstein. This may accord with the spirit of the Pontateuch, though it makes us shiver to think of "blood for blood;" but one would think that the death penalty might cover up revenge. Just a taste of the New Testament would take the bitterness out of that great sorrow.

A MURDERER HANGED IN SACRAMENTO.

A Sacramento dispatch in yesterday's Enterprise gives the following statement of the hanging of David Turley.

David Turley was executed here to-day at the county jail for the murder of Wm. Shaw at Roseville last April. The murder was a cold blooded affair. Annoyed at the indisposition of Shaw to engage in a fight with another man, Turley drew a revolver and shot at him three times, killing him. Turley's guilt was never questioned. The pleas set up for him on his trial were drunkenness and emotional insanity, but they had little weight with the jury. Strong efforts were made to obtain a commutation of sentence, but the Governor could not be convinced that this was a case in which he ought to interfere and sent a communication to this effect to the Sheriff. Turley had an interview with his brother this morning. He was afterward attended by Father Scanlan and several Sisters of Mercy and was baptized and partook of the last sacraments of the Catholic Church. Two o'clock was fixed for the execution. At that hour Sheriff Larue and his deputies took charge of the culprit, who walked to the scaffold and took his place upon it with singular composure. At the fatal moment he uttered the cry, "Mother, mother, I'm coming!" He struggled but little.

DIED FROM EXPOSURE.—The Eureka Sentinel of February 24 contains the following account of a man who died in the county hospital there:

Yesterday morning at 6 o'clock, Joseph Sullivan died at the county hospital of a congestive chill. It will be remembered that deceased, in company with a man named Simpson, some time since, started afoot for Tybo, and losing their way in a snow storm, had their feet badly frozen, and were picked up by the driver of the Tybo stage, brought to town and conveyed to the hospital. Since that time both men have been comfortably cared for, but Sullivan, in consequence of the effects of exposure, gradually grew worse until death came to his relief. Had he lived both of his feet would have had to have been amputated at the ankle, and knowing this, when Dr. Reece on Tuesday told him that his hours were numbered, he preferred death to the loss of his feet. Deceased was a native of Ireland, aged 36 years, and came from Colusa county, California, to this place. He will be buried to-day. His companion Simpson is also suffering from the effects of that bitter trip and will lose one of his feet.

MINING NEWS.—In the Ophir there has been a steady increase in the value of the ore found in the prospecting drift that encourages the belief that large deposits of paying ore will soon be encountered. The amount of ore extracted by the Consolidated Virginia Company is being gradually increased and now amounts to over 700 tons per day. The Occidental mill, which has lain idle during the greater part of the winter on account of the bad condition of the roads, was started up on Consolidated ore last Thursday. The yield of the mine up to last evening for the present month was over $700,000 in excess of what had been taken out at the same date in January. There are large accumulations of ore at all the mills. Some promising improvements are noted in the Imperial and Alpha grounds at the depth of 2,000 feet, and greater breadths of ore than were known to exist are being opened out in the Belcher. In the Overman and Justice mines improvements are also spoken of and the prospects for the development of good bodies of ore are considered excellent. Our prospecting companies are all hard at work and in the main they are meeting with very encouraging indications in the shape of quartz and low grade ores. The feeling is that we are to see a brisk time in stocks before next June.—Enterprise.

McKee, the blonde man of St. Louis, convicted of complicity in the whisky frauds, has applied for a new trial. The filing of the necessary affidavit being mentioned in the dispatch it further says:

Some editorials from the Republic, which are claimed to have served to prejudice the case against the defendant, were also filed. The affidavit mentioned is by Watson Foster of Pike county, Missouri, who charges H. E. Sumner, a juror in the McKee trial, with having prejudged the case by stating previous to the trial that he believed McKee to be guilty, and that "he was the biggest toad in the puddle." The Court ordered that the defendant have leave until the 5th of March to file additional affidavits, the prosecution ten days thereafter to answer the same, and then the defendant to have until the 20th to file testimony in rebuttal.

MISTAKEN FOR TWEED.—Oval-faced, portly gentlemen, with full gray beards, labor under great disadvantage at the present time. Yesterday a man answering the above description alighted from the passenger train, and in company with a traveling companion who had an official look, promanaged the platform. The portly gentleman was mistaken by the by-standers for Tweed, and whisperings to that effect were rapidly transmitted through the crowd, and were it not for the assurances of a spectator who had seen "the Boss" that the traveler was not Tweed many would have left with the impression that they seen one of the greatest public plunderers of the age, not even excepting the St. Louis revenue collectors.—[Silver State, Feb. 24.]
